The committee report is written and recommends that the survey should be proceeded with as rapidly as possible.

The Senate committee on appropriations to-day practically decided to amend the Indian appropriation bill by adding a provision prepared by Senator Pettigrew in lieu of the action of the committee on ladian affairs a few days ago, providing for reforms in the Indian Territory. The amendment authorizes the Dawes commission to segregate the lands occupied by existing towns and by church and school buildings outside of towns and which are operated for minerals and allotting the remaining territory equally among the members of each of the five civilized tribes, taking into consideration area and value. They are also to put the allottees in possession of the lands allotted them. The amendment also provides for two additional federal judges and gives the United of the tribes shall be valid until it shall dent of the United States. The persons inhabiting the towns are allowed to incorporate under the laws of Arkansas.

Representative Harrison, of Alabama, today made a report to the House from the for the settlement of the affairs of the Pacific roads by a commission. Mr. Harthat it is impossible to place the questions involved in the government's relations with the Pacific roads, with all their technical details, before Congress in such a manner that intelligent action can be taken. The report continues: "The debts due the government are daily growing larger and the means of payment smaller. Foreclosure proceedings are pending against the Union Pacific, and this road is likely to be sold and the government's claim against the same disposed of before the next regular on of Congress. If this should occur the most valuable and important part of nent will have passed into other hands without the preservation to the government of the many valuable rights and privileges It now has." It is argued that a better price can be obtained for the Union and Central Pacific if sold jointly, but that Congress cannot conduct the necessary negotiations. The advantage of a commission consisting of the secretaries of the treasury and interior and the attorney general are pointed out, one of them being that all information relative to the roads is in their hands.

The Republicans in Congress are formulating a plan looking to the passage of a bill to reduce the congressional representation in States where census returns show conclusively that any considerable proportion of the voting population is disfran-chised. This will take the place of the "force bill" and is the inevitable boomerang effect of recent legislation in Southern States for the disfranchisement of the Crush at the White House. WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.-President and Mrs. Cleveland gave their annual reception to the army and navy and the marine corps at the White House to-night. It was the final state reception of the official term of Mr. Cleveland, and, with the exception of that given by Mrs. Cleveland to the public last Saturday, the crowd was the largest of the season, and probably equal to that seen at any time during the incumbency of the President in the executive mansion So great was the crush that the guests moved about with great difficulty, and many in line gave up the attempt to greet those receiving. The occasion was a most brilliant one, the insignia of the members of the diplomatic corps, who turned out in large numbers, and the shining epaulets and unifroms of the army and navy officers, forming a glittering contrast to the magificent tollets of the ladies. The Marine Band, under Prof. Fancuilli, furnished the nusic for the occasion.

This statement is made on the authority of President Proctor, of the Civil-service Commission, who says President Cleveland has no intention of issuing an order bringing the host of fourth-class offices into the civil service. The Presdent on several occasions, it is known, has talked the matter over informally, but has never determined upon making the extension, regarding it as not feasible now.

Throughout the dinner the band of the Coldstream Guards played, the music including many American airs. A feature of the speeches was the extreme cordiality with which all references to the United States were received. Sir Clements Markham, president of the club, in proposing a toast in honor of Mr. Bayard, said that dial friendships never to be forgotten had village church he left the pew where he been formed between Americans and Englishmen. For his own part, he had always this great line of railway across the conti- remembered with pleasure of his meeting with John C. Fremont in California. In conclusion he eulogized the efforts of Embassador Bayard in England in the interests of peace and good will Embassador Bayard was loudly cheered when he rose to respond. He made a direct allusion to the arbitration treaty and inquired whether with this important measure and the matter of the rule of the road at sea settled it could not be believed that all other differences could be disposed of by arbitration. This was followed by loud and long continued cheering. Continuing, Mr. Bayard said: "We have here in person the lord chief justice of England, Baron Russell of Killoween, the greatest living advocate of that great principle. I do not for one moment believe that the spirit that governed him and animated the people behind him, and the spirit in which he has been received can long be delayed. It cannot be permanently obstructed. It may be delayed, but it cannot be defeated.' These statements were followed by cheering and scenes of enthusiasm. Continuing, Mr. Bayard said: "I leave you in peace, and I hope to learn that you are always at peace with the world. I have labored for better understanding between well-meaning men of both countries. I do not pretend to speak for others, for I am glad to say am not their accredited agent. I have always worn my colors in my cap. No one can doubt them, if plain speaking can make them believe that the real heart of the American people for which I alone pretend to speak is for a manly trust between the people of both countries." The conclusion of Embassador Bayard's address was followed by prolonged cheers.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said in re sponding to Mr. Bayard's address: "Embassador Bayard has won the strongest regard of the people of England. He represents the side of the American character most like our own. We feel that the links which Mr. Bayard referred to bind us for all time. They will always remind us that we are of one blood. Our art and our literamore than the people of England. We love the nation which is becoming so powerful before all mankind and we shall always treasure Mr. Bayard's among our recollections of America and Americans.

Lord Chief Justice Russell eulogized Embassador Bayard in the highest terms. He first spoke of Mr. Bayard as an old friend. He then referred to the American embassador as "one who truly came as a messenger of peace; one who while here has in no way lessened the rights and position of a great republic and has found it consistent with the loftiest patriotism to bring two great nations close together. Mr. Hamm was a prominent memtrue ties between Great Britain and the ber of the Methodist Church-was a class United States had been established and cor- leader. One night while at service in the was sitting with his wife and left town without informing any one as to where he was going. He had been a live stock dealer for years, using money furnished by Daniel Harris. Mr. Harris alleged that Hamm went away with several hundred dollars of his money. A detective was employed and Hamm was arrested in St. Louis in company with Mrs. Miles, who left her home near Doddridge Chapel, in this county, about the time Hamm disappeared. His wife, who is a refined and pious woman, forgave her husband, welcomed him home, and his neighbors overlooked his wrongdoing. A few days ago Hamm prevailed on his wife to sell their home in Greensfork and remove to Elwood. This was done and a mortgage of $200 was paid off, which left $600 as the purchase price. Three hundred dollars was deposited in a Richmand bank and Hamm retained $300. He left for Elwood, ostensibly to look for a location, taking the money with him. He has falled to come back, and no trace of him can be discovered. It develops that Mrs. Miles again left her home on the same day that Hamm disappeared, boarded the train at Cambridge City and has not been heard from Meanwhile Mrs. Hamm, despoiled of her home, twice a victim of her husband's treachery, sits at home childless, comfortless and old. If Mr. Hamm will return he will be gladly welcomed by his old neighbors and townsmen.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. GREENSBURG, Ind., Feb. 11.-In the suit of Hiram Johnson against Frank Mc-Henry, to recover $300 allowed by statute for offering to bribe a voter, the jury brought in a verdict for the defendant this morning. Johnson testified that he was employed by the Democratic campaign committee as spotter to catch Republican workers, and had invited two of his party friends to secrete themselves in the loft of his stable, when he requested McHenry, who was a member of the police force, to visit him. The witnesses testified that they heard McHenry make a direct offer to buy Johnson's vote for $5 if he would vote the whole Republican ticket, and that he was to enter the voting place and declare his inability to make his ticket and request the election clerk to stamp the ticket. The clerk would then signal to some one on the outside, who in turn would give McHenry the "word" that his man had voted all right. The defense was that Johnson was known as a spotter, and that he was used by McHenry to bleed the Democratic party.

Gas Flambeaux Still Burning. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

HARTFORD CITY, Ind., Feb. 11.-State Gas Inspector J. C. The Oregon Deadlock.

SALEM, Ore., Feb. 11.-Conferences of the two opposing forces were held last night, and as a result the senatorial situation put itself in a clearer prospective than at any time since the opening of the session. The organization plan, however, appears just as far from solution as ever. Broadly speaking, the conferences were of the Republican. Mitchell and the anti-Mitchell followers respectively, but each disclaims that it is a representative of either faction. The first consisted of Republican senators, who have for the most part been friendly to Mitchell, and who have refused on the ground of its illegality, to enter the joint convention. The situation was fully discussed and it was unanimously decided to follow the same course pursued heretofore, and that is to refuse to participate in the joint assembly as at present constituted. The second was of Republican members of the joint convention. It was decided by resolution that the convention is a proper and lawful method to elect a senator and to continue its daily session to that end. When the joint convention assembled today 37 members were present, 11 senators and 26 representatives. After several

It was passed almost unanimously, only ten votes being rather than any distinctly new light cast on cast against it in both houses. The railroads made but little resistance, preferring to let this bill pass than bills pending to reduce passenger and freight rates. persons are fellow-servants under this law who work together at the same time and place to a common purpose of the same grade for any railroad company. All persons who are superintendents or exercise control over other persons employed by any railroad company are vice principals and are not fellow-servants. The railroads are liable for damages for injury of any agent or servant by the negligence of any other agent or servant employed by such railroad. The railroad attorneys here state that the law is class legislation and will be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

AMUSEMENTS. lish's the rest of the week. Park-"Peck's Bad Boy." Grand-"Merchant of Venice." Against all the criticism that might hurled at Walker Whiteside in his large repertory of Shakspearean roles, he is in a position to reply that he satisfies his audience and satisfies so well that it is a common thing for the people to interrupt with applause in the middle of his impressive scenes. One who is a stickler for traditional dramatic reading of the ever-familiar lines of the bard whose work has inspired the mimic art in youthful Whiteside, might wonder at his success at times when lowing that, next Thursday, comes "The Fatal they behold some of his original inflections heretofore seen in the higher-priced and queer divisions of sentences for emphasis, but that is a dilemma in which ex-Notes of the Stage. perts are constantly finding themselves. But above all, it is this actor's personality that is the secret of his achievement. Whiteside was fash-ioned on delicate lines. He has the curves feature of the olio. and graces of a coquette and a voice that thrills with every utterance. There is both heart and intellect to a high degree in his make-up, and his effort as Shylock is rewarded with a sympathy on the part of the audience which the character does not de serve, and which the lines hardly bear out one in supposing the author ever intended. But this is the work of Whiteside, just as it is his trick to put the audience in tears of sorrow and sympathy for the ill-advised Othello, when allowing himself to be driven to murder by the designing Iago. Whiteside's Shylock is no stereotyped character; it is his art that is so frequently applauded the interesting role. This Shylock melts to They were on their way to a dinner party, tears one instant when memory of his dear Leah is revived, and the next he curses Antonio to the depths because of the grudge he bears him in particular, rather riage was struck by the swiftly moving than because of any grudge he bears the whole Christian people. The Spanish ballet, "The Capeadores," was the best of the series and was really an artistic production. The time of the music is followed by the waving of various colored scarfs, making a kaleidoscopic effect of great brilliancy, The audience last night was distinctly Republican, as was ascertained by the aid of a stereopticon. At one stage of the play a series of photographs of the country's great men were thrown upon a canvass. Washington, Grant, Lincoln and the rest were all received with ap plause.
